

We care about each other at work and our families at home, whether that includes ten kids, one goldfish, or neither.

Family

Mary Secole

At the outbreak of the Crimean War, Jamaican nursing pioneer Mary Seacole applied to go care for the wounded. The government said no, but she felt she had to help and went anyway. The renown she earned for fearlessly caring for soldiers on both sides led to her being later named the greatest black Briton.

What does it mean for us to be family? It's not to replace our home lives; quite the opposite! Rather, we legitimately care about our coworkers and our families (as varied as our situations away from work can be!). And we all take responsibility for keeping each other safe and healthy, and making this place a source of happiness, growth and fulfillment, because that's what families do!
